

Your views on portsmouth.co.uk

Three options are given to look in to Gosport hospital deaths

This has dragged on for so long now that it is imperative that the truth should out. If this has not happened yet what was the point of the first enquiry?

The families and public need to know if this was, and perhaps still is, a recurring event.

We need to be assured that if an elderly member of our family is in hospital, whether for treatment or post care, that they are going to come home without having suffered negligence or inappropriate care.

gosportcatwoman

Gosportcatwoman I fully agree with you. Caroline, do you not think the families have already suffered distress and are owed closure?

rubberman

I'm sure you would prefer option two or three, Ms Dinenage, but your loved one didn't die there so it's not up to you is it?

I also hope you do not put pressure on the families to choose what YOU think should be the avenue chosen.

Misstea

Gosport MP Caroline Dinenage's comment that a full inquiry '..would be expensive ..' is rather distasteful.

After being abused for 13 years, having been cleaned out of their life savings in an attempt to even obtain an Inquest, why is the cost to the state that killed their relatives and destroyed their family lives even being considered in connection with this?

It is fairly obvious that the state never cared one iota about the amount of 'distress' it caused them in the past.

Why allow it to pretend it does now?

AgeismSucks

Solar farm near Fareham gets the green light

This is such a ridiculously bad use of the site, I hardly know where to begin.

The energy required, and pollution caused, to make solar panels on the scale required in these daft projects means that the effective environmental break-even for a scheme like this runs into decades.

They would have been much better off