A lot of the info that you have enquired about below is simple medical terminology, wbc means white blood cells, Na refers to the level of sodium in the blood. Almost certainly irrelevant, as a house officer one of your more mundane responsibilities is to record the blood test results in the notes.

I am very grateful for your efforts in trying to decipher my handwriting and the more wacky minutiae of medical note keeping, but wonder if it would be more time efficient for both of us if you leave a copy of the notes and some blank statement paper at sevenoaks and I will knock out a draft statement before we meet on the 4th. Shouldn't take me long, am very used to writing police statements having been the Dr to an infantry regiment for 2 years. I am probably in a better position to translate the notes into laymans terms. Just leave a note as to the period on which you want me to comment. I am not really in a position to comment as you have requested above as to why the referral to dr Lord was made without full sight of the notes. I will only have scant internet access from today onwards.

Apologies if this inconveniences, but sitting in an internet cafe in Peru it seems the most efficient way of doing things.

Yours

Ian Gurney

Herewith a copy of the statement I have prepared. Can you help me however with some words and symbols?

What does WR MMO mean

What does symbol : mean?

Is Apyresgal the correct spelling, and what is it?

What is Hb?

What is Na, ?

Wbc,

Na,

K,

P/at

Urea

Creat?

What does teds mean?

Is Sub- Trochartic the correct spelling and what does it mean?

What does Ć signify?

What is Gelonet?

Can you give me your home address and telephone number in Australia.

The questions I need to ask are as follows;

With regard to the entry "Would benefit from Dr Lord for rehab" What is this that has been recorded, and why have the comments been made?"

With regard to the entry "Dear Dr Lord, what is this that has been recorded and what was the care and treatment plan for the patient?"

Your best recollection of this would be appreciated. I apologise if some of these questions are obvious but they need to be asked and answered

I am going into a lot of detail in this manner, so that my visit to you on 4/1/06 will be short. I appreciate that you will be extremely busy and time will be short.

Thank you for your indulgence.

Regards
