Dear Colleague

A short time ago, you registered with us to access five Ovid databases – Medline, CINAHL, AMED, CLINPSYC and EBMR (Evidence-Based Medicine Reviews) – via the Internet. We hope you have been able to search these databases successfully and that being able to has proved useful to you.

At the time, we sent you a list of 32 full-text electronic journals which we thought would be available from October. In fact, as you may already have discovered, they are available now! This means that if you search any of the five Ovid databases and retrieve references from any of the journals on the list, you can link to the full text of articles! Alternatively, you can search all Journals@Ovid Full Text titles as if they were a database!

Please find attached an up-to-date list of all the databases and electronic journals available to you. Note that the databases include EMBASE (an excellent alternative to Medline) and HMIC (a very good health management database). You will find both of these and BNI (British Nursing Index) on the Internet at www.optonet.net (BNI was formerly at a different address). As before, the username and password are smhp and miltonp respectively.

If you would like further help to make the most of these databases and electronic journals, may I suggest that you contact one of the following members of library staff:
